An exchange mentions the case of a little gril who was seriously injured A Word of Caution.—In this holiday season when the hearts of children are gladdened with new playthings, when the buying and giving of toys belong to the order of the day, it may be well to suggest a caution regarding the dangerous materials which have sometimes been employed in making or in beautifying these small articles. An exchange mentions the case of a little girl who was seriously injured by putting her doll in her mouth, perhaps gnawing at it, as children will. On examination it was found that white lead had been used in coloring the doll, and as that was certainly not the only doll of the pattern, it seems worth while to call attention to the accident. The presence of this poison is eastly delected by means known to every apothecary.
